JOHN BROWN'S CAVE—CABIN—MUSEUM, AND THE JOHN HENRY KAGI MEMORIAL

Location—Twentieth Street on Highway No. 2, Nebraska City

John Henry Kagi was born March 15, 1835, at Bristolville, Ohio, his mother died when he was three years old. His father, Abraham N. Kagi, with his younger daughter Mary, preempts a claim in 1853 on Camp Creek in Otoe County, Nebraska. John Henry Kagi accompanied his older sister Mrs. Allen B. Mayhew (Barkara Kagi) and her husband to Nebraska in 1855, he taught school and studied law in Nebraska City and was admitted to the bar at the age of 21.

Arriving at Topeka, Kansas, July 4, 1856, John Henry Kagi encountered the conditions then existing in the Territory of Kansas. In the months of intimacy that followed the meeting of John Brown and John Henry Kagi, there is not one discordant note.

John Henry Kagi was a regular correspondent for the Washington National Era, and the New York Evening Post. He was a writer for the Kansas Tribune at Topeka and the Lawrence Republican. He wrote a good deal for the Chicago Tribune, Cleveland Leader and the New York Tribune.

History tells of these men in the Battle of Osawatimie, August 30, 1856. The massacre at Pottawattomie. An attack on pro-slavery men at Black Jack. "I will carry the war into Africa," declared John Brown.

Ex-Judge Rush Elmore, a United States Judge armed with bludgeon and revolver struck Kagi over the head and shot him in the breast and arm. The Judge dodged behind a pillar, Kagi with revolver in hand shot Elmore in the groin, laid him low.

At the Convention of John Brown and his followers held May 8, 1858, in Chatham, Canada, John Brown was elected Commander in Chief, and John Henry Kagi Secretary of War.

John Henry Kagi and Aaron D. Stevens led the march and were the first of John Brown's 19 men to cross the bridge to Harper's Ferry the night of October 16, 1859.

Kagi was killed at Harper's Ferry and Brown was hung. John Henry Kagi is buried with John Brown on the John Brown Homestead near Lake Placid, New York.

Allen B. Mayhew, in 1862, operated a trail of prairie schooners. He was killed by the Indians near Salt Lake City, Utah.

The two sisters of John Henry Kagi, Mary (Mrs. John Davis), and Barbara (Mrs. Allen B. Mayhew, remarried Bradway), are buried in Camp Creek Cemetery in Otoe County, Nebraska.

These premises will be open to the public this summer. Read the book, "John Henry Kagi and the Old Log Cabin Home," written, copy-righted, and for sale by Edward D. Bartling, Nebraska City, Nebraska. Postpaid, 40 cents.
